We will have 9 summer weekend drawing and painting classes. They will run from June 6 to August 2, 2015. Since many families want their students to keep taking art classes during the summer, we will keep the current class levels and schedules for their summer registration.

The curriculum for beginners this summer will be step-by-step lessons in how to draw cartoons, animals and more. Instruction will be in both English and Mandarin.

In the intermediate level, the students will practice perspective, and light and shadow. We will also develop our comic art style. The advanced students will work on their individual creative projects.

The curriculum for our intermediate and advanced students this summer will also focus on "troubleshooting". During the school year, I introduced various skills to our intermediate and advanced students. If students are to retain these skills they need to continue practicing them. In the summer session, we will focus our practice on subjects that students have problems with, such as how to draw eyes, noses and hands from different angles; how to use cold and warm colors; how to draw buildings with perspective; how to paint clouds and water; and how to draw and paint wrinkles and textures.

We will also offer advanced students still life and clay portraiture to enhance their rendering of light and shadow. They can also draw and paint from the handout options.

If you will be in town during any part of the summer, let your child take on an artistic challenge. Sign your child up for part of our summer session.

In the case of our new students, we will discreetly discover what their skill levels are and then build a course from there that will prepare them for the next art school year.

We will have new Level-One classes in the fall. But, for the summer, the new students will study with the current Level-One students.

The tuition for the summer is the same as the current tuition.
